And: "In contrast to all earlier epochs (including industrial society), the risk society is characterized essentially by a lack: the impossibility of an external attribution of hazards. In other words, risks depend on decisions, they are industrially produced and in this sense politically reflexive" (183).

CJS Book Review: Risk Society, Towards a New Modernity

These new risks require society to reconfigure itself to deal with them; thus society is reflexive in terms of risk management. This reflexivity includes the development of new fields of study, new institutions (such as the Society for Risk Analysis or the Canadian Risk and Hazards Network), and new risk management professions such as disaster and emergency management.
