As the Gulf Stream approaches Canada, the current becomes wider and slower as the flow dissipates and it encounters the cold Labrador Current moving in from the north. At this point, the current begins to meander, or change from a fast, straight flow to a slower, looping current (Figure 9.2.2).

In some places the Gulf Stream encounters seamounts and other bumps along its path. The Charleston Bump, a submerged area of rocky outcroppings and cliffs, rises high enough above the seafloor to alter with the Gulf Stream's flow. This interaction of seafloor and current causes turbulence and upwelling that enhances plankton
